

I have become increasingly disturbed in recent years at the concentration of media power in the hands of a few mega-companies. The airwaves belong to the public, and companies are expected to use them in the public interest. This means variety and diversity of view, not the blandness and conservatism that are becoming omnipresent. I urge FCC to hold the line. Do not allow any more concentration. People like Rupert Murdoch may be smart businessmen, but are oblivious to the public interest or the good of the country. FCC should at least maintain the current rules.
